

New Lab publications highlight science and national security

February 1, 2017

New issues are now available online for two of the Lab's publications.

1663: Los Alamos Science and Technology Magazine

The "1663" part of this title refers to the post office box number that was used during World War II days and refers to our Manhattan Project history. This issue of the publication includes the use of lasers, transportation and sustainability, and even cancer genetics.

National Security Science

This issue includes articles on the 65th anniversary of the Nevada National Security Site, our nuclear test readiness, the need for subcritical testing, and why the United States need a nuclear triad...among others.
